Best unknown writer who never won a MacArthur genius grant but should haveBy AmazedbylifeI discovered Paul Metcalf by reading a book of short stories, which I almost never do. I didn't read Metcalf there, I read "Dinner at the Bank of England," by Paul Davenport, got turned on to him, and read more Davenport. In one of his essays, he mentioned Metcalf. Sounded interesting so I gave Metcalf a try. HE IS AMAZING! Writes like no one else I know of, stuff that is truly consciousness-expanding, often funny and tragic at the same time. All three volumes of his Collected Works are well worth reading, having and sharing. Incidentally, Paul Metcalf is also amazing. But he's a mostly unknown writer who did win a MacArthur genius grant!

American history reimagined by Herman Melville's great grandson, a Black Mountain poet. A stunning achievement!
