A. E. Hartink : The Complete Encyclopedia of Knives before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised The Complete Encyclopedia of Knives:

Of course it is not exhaustive in the sense of having all the knives in the world and being the sum of all catalogs, there is no such a book. It does not have an approximation to the values, which is a pity. Now, you look at it as you would to a nice museum catalog or even a top grade shopping guide. It is very well bound and printed, photographs are sharp and paper is first class. It is an "object book", and the short chapters on knifemaking, steels, locking systems, etc. are about as much as 95% of the customers would like or need. For more on technicalities, go to an engineering book.Besides, it is of a manageable size, not the mammoth 11.9" x 8.5" of its bigger brother.0 of 0

I really wanted to get it for my boyfriend because he loves knives so much...kinda scary but whatever! Anyway, I was out of town when I found this book so I thought I would order it here and get it mailed to him. He was so surprised and he loves this book! He claims that it has every knife ever made in there...which is hard to believe. But I'm happy if he's happy!0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. sweet bookBy Chris O'BrienAwesome place to find info on a ton of cool knives. Don't look for low end crap but on middle of the road and up it's great.

About the AuthorA. E. Hartink grew up with firearms; both his father and his grandfather were in the Royal Dutch Navy. In his youth, he graduated from his first Diana air rifle to a small bore carbine, and then to large caliber handguns. During his military service, he was a sergeant weapons instructor. He later joined the Dutch state police, where he soon became a detective, extending his already vast knowledge of firearms. Following the reorganization of Dutch police forces in 1994, Hartink became a specialist firearms detective with a regional police force, and since 1995 he has worked for a regional firearms department, where his main activities are related to the control of legal and prevention of illegal firearms. In addition to being a regular contributor to various publications, he has written extensively on weapons of every kind under a variety of pen names (as well as his own), and has translated books about weapons, ammunition, and the reloading of cartridges.
